Washington State: Twin Peaks

Okay, so Twin Peaks only exists in David Lynch's imagination, but you can approximate a trip there by visiting the show's filming sites in the Evergreen State. Start with Seattle and its legendary skyline before venturing out to the hilly expanse and snow-capped volcanic peaks of Olympic National Park. Check out Snoqualmie Falls, the iconic waterfall from the show's opening credits, and get a feel for the eerie, green topography. A four-mile hike will get you to the summit of Mount Si for breathtaking views across the Puget Sound and Olympic Mountains. Black Tomato's guests stay at the Salish Lodge & Spa (or, as it's known in the series, the Great Northern Hotel, home base of lead character, FBI Agent Dale Cooper). Owned by the Muckleshoot Indian Tribe, this swank lodge serves a famous four-course country breakfast that includes honey from its own hives poured atop a homemade biscuit.
