If you and your honey are getting hitched, there's no shortage of potential venues in Seattle and greater Puget Sound where you two can say, "I do." There are indoor and outdoor options, small spaces for teeny-tiny ceremonies, locales that are on the water, out of the rain, and under the radar.

Choosing a venue—a decision upon which other wedding day considerations hinge—can be a bit stressful. Researching, touring, and visualizing what your celebration might look like in various spaces and learning more about your own priorities along the way can be fun, too. (That and the cake-testing.) Once selected, newly betrothed can start to hone in on their venue's possibilities and confirm other details to personalize their nuptials.

So, whichever tone you want to strike—highfalutin with downtown views, laid back with mountains in the distance, just you two and a judge, or something else entirely—here are some A+ options to consider for your big day.

16 Salish Lodge & Spa

Salish Lodge and Spa started out as an eight-room inn known for its country breakfasts back in 1916. Today, it's a renowned Pacific Northwest resort perched atop Snoqualmie Falls that's well-known for its role in the popular TV series Twin Peaks. The lodge offers a handful of indoor and outdoor venue options for wedding ceremonies and receptions, including the Centennial Green with views of Snoqualmie Falls and the surrounding river valley for up to 125 guests. A more economical package is available for smaller parties of 8 to 20 people.
